

"PRE-POSTMODERN"

Four Jewish Nationalist Thinkers of the Last Century

Avinoam Rosenak

Translated by Joel Linsider

For a symposium on the consequence of blur in a journal whose aims are irenic, it seems right that contributions should blur distinctions on which current enmities are built or in the process of building. One distinction of this kind is of specific relevance to enmities (or resentments is perhaps a better word) in Israel but, given the significance of Jewish nationalism to international politics, has wider ramifications. For some years now, an opposition has been drawn, not only among Israeli academics but among politicians and journalists as well, between Jewish nationalist or Zionist thought and the kind of thinking that is called "postmodern." The argument is that a Zionist cannot be a postmodernist and vice versa, the two being incompatible. It appears that this opposition originated with an identification made between "post-Zionist" historical revisionism (of the kind associated with Ilan Pappe, Benny Morris, Avi Shlaim, Simha Flapan, and Tom Segev) and postmodernist methods, assumptions, and claims. In some cases, the identification was made by the "new historians" themselves. While there is considerable bad blood between post-Zionist scholars and those, inside and outside the academy, who defend one or another version of the Zionist narrative, it needs to be demonstrated relations. My effort heard of, Zionist na Kook (1865–1935), Hazan (1920–2003), arguments of a sort Connections b by now well establish Chatterjee describes to the characteristic his own prophetic ex origin of Wittgenste Tractatus, "whereof understands this ide tions (thus Chatterje genstein's early and in his opposition to in general—and Ch an unyielding war, i of Jacques Derrida a

1. This article relies in part on my translation of "hamah ve-shalom be-ha-'ha-aheir" ("War and Peace in the Heir"), a section of Regarding 'the Other', which I have not expressly treated in my article. Otherwise noted, translations of Hebrew sources are by Joel Linsider.

2. Ranjit Chatterjee, Wittgenstein and the Politics of Concealment (New York: Peter Lang, 2006). Chatterjee, "Wittgenstein and the Politics of Concealment," Congress of Jewish Studies 2006, 10.

3. Ludwig Wittgenstein, Philosophical Investigations, trans. C. K. Ogden, introd. R. H. Stoothoff, G. E. Moore, and P. F. Strawson (Oxford: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1953). Chatterjee puts the matter in this way: "The most important thing about Wittgenstein's philosophy is that it could directly be said what it concerns, these things would be the things that he wanted to say" (Chatterjee, Wittgenstein and Judaism, 11).

4. Chatterjee, Wittgenstein and Judaism, 11. Chatterjee maintains that the two periods of Wittgenstein's life sought to convey his ideas in different ways. His style in Philosophical Investigations was such that his idea was not clear enough. He regarded it as antimetaphysical rather than metaphysical.

to be demonstrated that postmodernism has nothing to do with their adversarial relations. My effort here will be to show that, even before postmodernism was heard of, Zionist nationalist thinkers such as Rabbi Abraham Isaac Hakohen Kook (1865–1935), Rabbi Moshe Avigdor Amital (1883–1946), Rabbi Abraham Hazan (1920–2003), and Professor Andre Neher (1914–1988) mounted Zionistic arguments of a sort that we now regard as poststructuralist or postmodern.<sup>1</sup>

Connections between postmodern thinkers and various Jewish sources are by now well established. In his book Wittgenstein and Judaism, for example, Ranjit Charterjee describes the Jewish background of Ludwig Wittgenstein, his ties to the characteristic hermeneutics of Judaism, his interest in Jewish texts, and his own prophetic experiences.<sup>2</sup> In particular, Charterjee argues that the Jewish origin of Wittgenstein's thought left its mark on the concluding sentence of the Treatise, "whereof one cannot speak, thereof one must be silent."<sup>3</sup> Charterjee underestands this idea to be a defining feature also of the Philosophical Investigations (thus Charterjee dismisses the conventional notion of a gap between Wittgenstein's early and later thinking).<sup>4</sup> His Jewisness is said to be evident as well in general—and Charterjee interprets Wittgenstein's writings overall as waging an unyielding war, in the spirit of Maimonides, against idolatry.<sup>5</sup> The writings of jacobus Derrida are treated in a similar manner by John D. Caputo, Harold Bloom, and others.

1. This article relies in part on Avirom Rosenak, "Milli-Chatterjee, Wittgenstein and Judaism," 100, 103. Of course, these connections were subjected to abundant criticism, as summarized in Nechama Leibowitz's critique, "War and Peace in Modern Jewish Thought, Ha-aher," (Regering, The Other), Daat 62 (2007): 99–125. Here I focus on the postmodern context of the question, which is not expressly treated in my article in Daat. Except as other sources are by Joel Linsky.

2. Ranjit Chatterjee, Wittgenstein and Judaism: A Trinumphant Connection (New York: Peter Lang, 2005). See also Chatterjee, "Wittgenstein as a Jewish Thinker," World Congress of Jewish Studies 10(2) (1990): 41–46.

3. Ludwig Wittgenstein, Tрактат Логико-Философский, C. K. Ogden, intro. Bertrand Russell (1922); London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1981; 189. Chatterjee notes his lack of overt interest was the result of the fear of "raising off eyebrows in times of lethal anti-Semitism" (114). As Chatterjee believes, it is hard to imagine that Wittgenstein's minimal acquaintance with Judaism, which was acquired by means of writers, e.g. Spengler, not to mention the requisite knowledge, for conducting a dialogue with traditional Jewish writers and themes.

4. Chatterjee himself acknowledges Wittgenstein's influence on him, as he did not discuss Talmudic tractates due show an overt interest in traditional Jewish texts. Wittgenstein did not discuss Talmudic tractates which his friends nor did he engage with Mainstream Jewish Halachot or the Book of Splendor. Whether or not this lack of overt interest was the result of the fear of "raising off eyebrows in times of lethal anti-Semitism" (114) is hard to imagine.

5. Chatterjee's article relies in part on Avirom Rosenak, "Milli-Chatterjee, Wittgenstein and Judaism," 100, 103. Of course, these connections were subjected to abundant criticism, as summarized in Nechama Leibowitz's critique, "War and Peace in Modern Jewish Thought, Ha-aher," (Regering, The Other), Daat 62 (2007): 99–125. Here I focus on the postmodern context of the question, which is not expressly treated in my article in Daat. Except as other sources are by Joel Linsky.

6. Chatterjee, "Wittgenstein and Judaism," 100, 103. Of course, these connections were subjected to abundant criticism, as summarized in Nechama Leibowitz's critique, "War and Peace in Modern Jewish Thought, Ha-aher," (Regering, The Other), Daat 62 (2007): 99–125. Here I focus on the postmodern context of the question, which is not expressly treated in my article in Daat. Except as other sources are by Joel Linsky.

7. This article relies in part on Avirom Rosenak, "Milli-Chatterjee, Wittgenstein and Judaism," 100, 103. Of course, these connections were subjected to abundant criticism, as summarized in Nechama Leibowitz's critique, "War and Peace in Modern Jewish Thought, Ha-aher," (Regering, The Other), Daat 62 (2007): 99–125. Here I focus on the postmodern context of the question, which is not expressly treated in my article in Daat. Except as other sources are by Joel Linsky.

8. Chatterjee, Wittgenstein and Judaism, 21–22. He main-suggests that the two periods differ only in how Wittgenstein changed his ideas and that Wittgenstein only conveyed his ideas after discussing them in print. This idea was not clear to his readers, who understood this style in Philosophical Investigations only after discussing them in print.

9. Chatterjee, Wittgenstein and Judaism, 22.

use aims are irenic, it ach current enemies is kind is of specific in Israel but, given cs, has wider ramifich, not only among ell, between Jewish-is called "postmod-nist and vice versa.
originated with the kind ionism (of the kind Japan, and Tom
. In some cases, the While there is one inside and outside narrative, it needs

Bloom, and other scholars.<sup>6</sup> Derrida shook up many admirers during the final two decades of his life as he began to speak of religion, to tell of his own “religion without religion,” his prayers and tears, and his understanding of the concept of the messiah.<sup>7</sup> Contradicting a prevalent view that Derrida’s thought opens the way to (the hell of) nihilism, Caputo points to the Jewish elements in his writings: the battle against idolatry, the opposition to cultural models demanding monistic decisiveness—and Bloom finds the source of such elements in Kabbalah, which, while being by no means a nihilism, suggests that all “interiors contain exteriors” and that “effects determine . . . causes.”<sup>8</sup>

Studies like these, by philosophers and literary theorists, of important postmodern thinkers have prompted scholars in Jewish studies to reconsider elements of Jewish thought in postmodern terms. Derrida’s concept of representation has been useful in explicating rabbinic and Hasidic exegetical doctrines. Talmudic, midrashic, and Hasidic texts are now frequently described as open-ended and dialogic genres of literature.<sup>9</sup> Benny Perl, for example, argues that the deconstructive practice of “describing a phenomenon in two different, even contradictory, ways” is unsurprising to yeshiva students, since they are taught its import and legitimacy.<sup>10</sup> Indeed, many passages of the Gemara read like examples of deconstructive writing, for instance where “the force of a marriage entered into by a man even after he has lived affectionately with his wife for many years” is nullified on the basis of a determination that “the entire time he was married, he was not in fact married but was engaged, rather, in fornication. . . . It is halakhah that determines absolutely what is proper and what is not . . . and the conclusion is that halakhah has no existence beyond the existence it itself creates.”<sup>11</sup> The idea

6. See John D. Caputo, The Prayers and Tears of Jacques Derrida: Religion without Religion (Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1997), and “Shedding Tears beyond Being: Derrida’s Experience of Prayer,” in Théologie négative, ed. Marco M. Olivetti (Rome: CEDAM, 2002), 861–80; Harold Bloom, Kabbalah and Criticism (1975; New York: Continuum, 1983); Susan Handelman, The Slayers of Moses: The Emergence of Rabbinic Interpretation in Modern Literary Theory (Albany: State University of New York Press, 1982), 163–78; Shira Wolosky, “Derrida, Jabès, Levinas: Sign-Theory as Ethical Discourse,” Prooftexts 2 (1982): 283–302; and Chatterjee, Wittgenstein and Judaism, 145. See also the bibliography on Derrida in Lieven Boeve, “Negative Theology and Theological Hermeneutics: The Particularity of Naming God,” Journal of Philosophy and Scripture 3.2 (2006): 1–3, esp. n. 18.

7. All of these factors led Derrida to write a document that can be considered a “Jewish confession.” See John D. Caputo, “Jacques Derrida (1930–2004),” Journal for Cultural and Religious Theory 6.1 (December 2004): www.jcrt.org/archives/06.1/caputo.pdf.

8. Bloom, Kabbalah and Criticism, 53.

9. See, for instance, Geoffrey Hartman and Sanford Budick, eds., Midrash and Literature (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1986), to which Derrida contributed an essay, as well as Michal Ben-Naftali’s introduction to Naftulei bavel, the Hebrew translation of Derrida’s Des Tours de Babel (Tel Aviv: Resling, 2002), 34 n. 20. For an argument against postmodern readings of Talmud, see Eliezer Greenstein, “Eye for Eye, Tooth for Tooth: Peshat, Derash, and the Question of the Context” [in Hebrew], Resling 5 (Summer 1998): 34–41, www.resling.co.il/pdfs/issue\_article\_53.doc.

10. Benny Perl, “Al ‘emunah, midrash, halakhah u-postmodernizm” (“On Faith, Midrash, Halakhah, and Postmodernism”), Ha-zofeh, March 8, 2005, www.hazofe.co.il/web/katava6.asp?modul=24&id=31111&word=&gila\_yon=2299&mador=1. It should be noted that Perl in this article comes out against the postmodern approach.

11. Perl, “Emunah.”

that a phenomenon
a foundational concept of Niels Bohr
Mordechai Rabinovitch,
the possibility of a scholar deconstructing
ary” concept,
that Jewish con-
trope of “read
mits re-compre-
ways of reading between his ap-toward narrati-
of postmodern

The dif-
that one assun-physics, it must religions (thou-
that in postmod-dependent on to the narrati-

12. Mordechai Rabinovitch, Psychotherapeutic Narrative (New York: Praeger, 1987), 34.

13. Mordechai Rabinovitch and PaRDeS (1998).

14. “Don’t read the text as if it were static or changing over time,” says Rotenberg, Dialogues in Psychotherapy, 10.

15. Mordechai Rabinovitch, Ha-aggadah ha-kabbalistische und Social Learning (Jerusalem: Be-hagut ha-yeburah shel ha-aggadah ha-kabbalistische, 2006).

16. For a comprehensive discussion of postmodernism and Derrida, see Gili Zivan, Dat le-Emunah (Religion without Illusion) (Jerusalem: Shalom Hirschberg, 2006). This discussion that to serve as background for the present article.

unchanged even as their metaphysical or metanarrative relevance to the concepts and narratives of others will be quite limited. On the other hand, the role of language as a shaper of reality will be greatly enhanced.<sup>20</sup> It is this combination in particular that alienates Jewish nationalists who want their understanding of the past to be affirmed by all as simply true. The postmodern nexus is viewed as by nature leftist in politics and, in relation to Israel, post- and anti-Zionist. Still, what is most characteristic of postmodern thinking is a matter of form rather than content: postmodernism differs from other intellectual streams in that it incorporates no positive claims at all. It holds no substantive brief regarding one claim or another and seeks only to illuminate the limits of claims that others advance. As Tamar Ross has said, this formal approach makes it possible to maintain a highly conservative orientation in religious discourse while being simultaneously in the forefront of postmodern conversation.<sup>21</sup> I will now try developing that insight with respect to Professor Neher and Rabbis Amiel, Hazan, and A. I. Kook.

The Messianism of the Unity of Opposites

Rabbi Kook was among the most prominent and influential figures of the Zionist movement.<sup>22</sup> His teachings comprise a classic of modern Jewish thought, but I want to direct attention here primarily to the doctrine of “the unity of opposites”<sup>23</sup> that lies at the heart of his writings (and is derived from, among other resources, the thinking of Rabbi Judah Loew of Prague [called Maharal]).<sup>24</sup> The doctrine has far-reaching implications from the perspective of postmodern religious discourse, because it considers opposed elements of reality as equally expressions of the same divine source.<sup>25</sup> It follows that each member of a pair of opposites requires the existence of the other—a position with radically pluralist implications.<sup>26</sup> To be sure, religious metanarratives have always drawn an ontological connection between God and the nations, a difference that has been given his understanding of the relationship between Israel and the rest of the world. In the words of the great German theologian, “God is not theistic concept of word and truth, but becomes relativistic concept,” which means that “all is truth, all is within the truth.”<sup>27</sup> This is based on Rabbi Judah Loew of Prague’s teaching that God is the “unity of opposites,” that is, the universal potentiality of creation in its diversity. These views in his historical context were part of Zionism, but especially the specific approach to the question of God’s unity regarding the pros and cons of Zionism in his article.<sup>28</sup> I am interested in the model of the unity of opposites as one we need even more than ever.

Multiplicity and variety are the hallmarks of the unity of opposites, and inexpressible “One” is the source of the unity. One needs to narrow itself by including the other in order to compromise my personal identity.

20. Ilan Gur-Ze’ev, ’Askolat Frankfurt ve-ha-historiyah shel ha-pesimizm (The Frankfurt School and the History of Pessimism) (Jerusalem: Magnes Press, 1996), 82. See also Peter Winch, “Understanding a Primitive Society,” in Rationality, ed. Bryan R. Wilson (Evanston, IL: Harper and Row, 1970), 82: “Reality is not what gives language sense. What is real and what is unreal shows itself in the sense that language has. Further, both the distinction between the real and the unreal and the concept of agreement with reality themselves belong to our language. . . . If then we wish to understand the significance of these concepts, we must examine the use they actually do have—in the language” (emphasis supplied).

21. Tamar Ross, “Mashma’utam shel hegdim datiyyim be-‘idan postmoderni” (“The Meaning of Religious Statements in a Postmodern Era”), in Tarbut yehudit be-‘ein ha-se’arot (Jewish Culture in the Eye of the Storm), ed. Avi Sagi and Nacham Ilan (Tel Aviv: Ha-Kibbutz ha-Me’uhad, 2002), 459–83.

22. Avinoam Rosenak, Ha-rav Quq (Rabbi Kook) (Jerusalem: Merkaz Zalman Shazar, 2006); Dov Schwartz, Hazziyonut ha-datit bein bigayon li-meshihiyut (Religious Zionism between Logic and Messianism) (Tel Aviv: Am Oved, 1999); Faith at the Crossroads: A Theological Profile of Religious Zionism, trans. Batya Stein (Leiden: Brill, 2002).

23. On the unity of opposites, see Avinoam Rosenak, Ha-halakhah ha-nevu’it: Ha-filosofiyah shel ha-halakhah be-mishnat ha-re’ayah Quq (Prophetic Halakhah: Rabbi A. I. H. Kook’s Philosophy of Halakhah) (Jerusalem: Magnes Press, 2007), 44–57.

24. See Avi Sagi, The Open Canon: On the Meaning of Halakhic Discourse, trans. Batya Stein (London: Continuum, 2007), chaps. 7–8.

25. In the kabbalistic context, this conception would be understood in terms of the sefirah of keter or ‘ayin.

26. Rosenak, Ha-halakhah ha-nevu’it. The substantial contribution of Rabbi Kook to the development of religious discourse has been treated in detail by Rosenak, see her “Ha-re’ayah Quq u-piyyut ha-hakarati shel ta’anot ‘emez be-‘idiot halakhah be-mishnah be-shulchan aruch,” in Akdamut 10 (Winter 2000–2001), www.merkazrav.org.il/files/1101294402773.pdf; “Hegdudim,” 282.

27. See Isaiah Tishby, The Way of the Masters, trans. David Goldstein, vol. 2 (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1989) 1: 100.

28. Accordingly, I argue that the concept of the unity of opposites is the product of the post-Six Day War religious Zionism. See Ehud Ben Ari, Ha-halakhah ha-nevu’it shel ha-zionut ha-merashit (Tel Aviv: Gorem merasen ‘o me’oded s. 2002).

implications.<sup>26</sup> To be sure, Rabbi Kook was speaking from the perspective of a religious metanarrative that would violate postmodern decorum. He moreover drew an ontological distinction (grounded in Kabbalah)<sup>27</sup> between Israel and the other nations, a difference that he regarded as unbridgeable.<sup>28</sup> At the same time, given his understanding of the unity of opposites, he argued that the relationship between Israel and the other nations is a complementary one, even one of mutual need. In the words of Rav Shaggar (Shimson Gershon Rosenthal), "from a pluralistic concept of world games encompassing no truth (not because we have failed to find the truth but because there exists no basis for establishing it), from a humble and the nations as one between core and periphery."<sup>29</sup> This model encompasses the "unity of opposites" and the vital nature of "the other." Israel encompasses both potential in their diverse cultures and forms of creativity.<sup>30</sup> Rabbi Kook conveys these views in his historical approach and political analyses of World War I and of Zionism, but especially in his analyses of "peace" and "war" as concepts.<sup>31</sup> His specific approach to these concepts and to the content of substantive arguments regarding the pros and cons of Christian violence are beyond the scope of this article.<sup>32</sup> I am interested here in the formal implications of his stance.

The model of the "unity of opposites" enables us to see the world of the other as one we need even if its perspective is diametrically opposed to our own. Multiflexibility and variety are necessary for the full expression of the unattainable and inexplicable "One." The infinite gap between Creator and creature strives to narrow itself by including a range of variations. That inclusiveness does not see her "Ha-reyah Qud u-postmodernizm: Ha-erekh ha-hakarati shel ta'anot emet" ("Rabbi Kook and Postmodernism: The Cognitive Value of Truth Claims"), Akkdamut 10 (Winter 2000–2001): 185–234, www.bmi.org.il/files/1010294402773.pdf; "Maschma'utam shel David Goldstein, vol. 2 (Oxford: Oxford University Press for the Littman Library, 1989), 447–546.

26. Rabbi Shimon Gershon Rosenthal Avodat Emet (Jerusalem) 4–57. The potential of the Jewish Religion: A Restraining Factor or a Prod to the Use of Force?"; in Shalom u-milhamah be-tarbut ha-yehudit (Peace and War in Jewish Culture), ed. Avieli Bar-Levav (Jerusalem: Zalman Shazar Center, 2006), 56–58.

27. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ba-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

28. According to me, more broadly, Rosenak, "Shalom u-milhamah."

29. Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 58–88.

30. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ba-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

31. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 58–88.

32. Rabbi Abraham Isaac Kook, Schemonaq avodatim (Eight Plates) (Jerusalem: Ramana, 1999), vol. 2, bk. 5, par. 205; and to Rabbi Kook's son, Rabbi Zvi Y. Kook, and is not unique to the post-Six Day War transformation of the post-Zionist religious Zionism. See Ehud Lazar, "Ha-dar ha-yehudit be-ketav or ayin," On the Meaning of Competition would be a theme: Magen Press, London: Continuum.

and the role of this combination of a pair of opposites of the Zionists of the First Aliyah as equally members of a pair of opposites of the Second Aliyah. Among other units of opposition, but also of postmodernism, among others, the unity of opposites of the Zionists of the First Aliyah as equally members of a pair of opposites of the Second Aliyah. The Am Yisrael–Judaean Profile of Rabbi A. I. H. Rabakab: Rabbi A. I. H. Rabakab, Avinom Rosenthal, Religious Zionism: The Future of Religion (Jerusalem: Brill, 2002).

33. Rabbi Shimon Gershon Rosenthal Avodat Emet (Jerusalem) 10 (Winter 2000–2001): 185–234, www.bmi.org.il/files/1010294402773.pdf; "Maschma'utam shel David Goldstein, vol. 2 (Oxford: Oxford University Press for the Littman Library, 1989), 447–546.

34. See Lissah Tishby, The Wisdom of the Zohar, trans. Heggedim, 282.

35. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

36. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

37. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

38. According to me, more broadly, Rosenak, "Shalom u-milhamah."

39. Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 58–88.

40. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

41. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

42. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

43. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

44. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

45. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

46. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

47. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

48. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

49. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

50. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

51. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

52. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

53. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

54. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

55. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

56. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

57. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

58. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

59. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

60. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

61. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

62. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

63. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

64. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

65. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

66. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

67. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

68. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

69. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

70. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

71. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

72. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

73. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

74. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

75. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

76. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

77. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

78. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

79. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

80. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

81. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

82. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

83. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

84. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

85. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

86. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

87. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

88. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

89. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

90. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

91. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

92. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

93. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

94. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

95. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

96. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

97. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

98. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

99. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

100. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

101. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

102. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

103. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

104. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

105. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

106. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

107. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

108. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

109. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

110. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

111. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

112. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

113. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

114. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

115. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

116. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

117. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

118. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

119. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

120. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

121. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

122. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

123. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

124. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

125. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

126. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

127. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

128. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

129. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

130. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

131. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

132. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

133. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

134. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

135. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

136. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

137. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

138. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

139. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

140. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

141. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

142. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

143. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

144. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

145. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

146. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

147. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

148. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

149. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

150. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

151. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

152. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

153. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

154. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

155. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

156. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

157. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

158. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

159. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

160. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

161. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

162. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

163. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

164. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

165. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

166. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

167. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

168. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

169. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

170. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

171. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

172. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

173. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

174. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

175. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

176. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

177. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

178. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

179. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

180. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

181. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

182. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

183. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

184. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

185. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

186. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

187. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

188. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

189. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

190. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

191. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

192. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

193. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

194. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

195. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

196. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

197. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

198. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

199. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

200. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

201. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

202. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

203. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

204. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

205. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

206. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

207. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

208. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

209. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

210. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

211. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

212. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

213. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

214. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

215. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

216. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

217. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

218. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

219. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

220. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

221. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

222. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

223. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

224. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

225. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

226. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

227. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

228. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

229. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

230. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

231. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

232. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

233. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

234. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

235. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

236. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

237. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

238. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

239. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

240. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

241. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

242. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

243. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

244. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

245. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

246. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

247. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

248. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

249. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

250. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

251. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

252. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

253. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

254. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

255. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

256. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

257. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

258. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

259. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

260. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

261. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

262. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

263. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

264. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

265. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

266. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

267. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

268. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

269. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

270. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

271. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

272. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

273. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

274. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

275. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

276. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

277. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

278. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

279. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

280. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, 51, 81, 131.

281. See Rosenak, "Ha-halakhah ha-nevut," 46, passes the variations seen among the nations of the world. Israel must preserve its uniqueness so as to make possible its integration of the others, who draw strength from it.<sup>34</sup> This model (grounded, as noted, in the writings of a classical source—Maharal) gained further vigorous expression in writings produced in France and North Africa by Rabbi Abraham Hazan and his teacher André Neher.

In Praise of the Diagonal

Rabbi Hazan<sup>35</sup> was one of the leading rabbis in twentieth-century North Africa.<sup>36</sup> Following World War II, he served as chief rabbi of the French army in Morocco; later as rabbi of the North African Jewish community in Strasbourg; and, beginning in the 1960s, as chief rabbi of the Israeli police and prison service. He melded the tradition of the North African rabbis and the world of André Neher. Neher was one of the leading Jewish philosophers in twentieth-century France and a pillar of what is called the Paris school of Jewish thought.<sup>37</sup> Hazan's world rested on contradictory cultural foundations, drawing as it did on Judaism, Arab culture, and French culture. That complexity had implications for his role as an educator and produced a pluralistic, anti-ideological personality, open to divergence from the conventions of his contemporaries.<sup>38</sup> The Parisian school of Jewish thought left its mark on a wide segment of French Jewry,<sup>39</sup> creating the atmosphere in which the Lithuanian Emmanuel Levinas and the North African 34. For broader treatment of this issue, see Rosenak, "Halakhah ha-nevu'it," 64–88.

35. See Miriam Stievie, Linto'a shamayim: Mif'al bayyav shel ha-rav 'Avraham Hazan, rav ha-mishtarab u-vatei hasohar (To Plant the Heavens: The Life Work of Rabbi Abraham Hazan, Police and Prison Chaplain) (Jerusalem: Bet-El Publishing, 2007); Avinoam Rosenak, "Bein 'ashkenaz li-zefon 'Afriqah: Halakhah, meta-halakhah ve-hinukh bi-khetavav shel ha-rav 'Avraham Hazan" ("Between Ashkenaz and North Africa: Halakhah, Meta-Halakhah and Education in the Writings of Rabbi Abraham Hazan"), Pe'amim 109 (2007): 95–124; "Ma'aseh 'avot siman lebanim: Historiyah, ge'ulah u-teshuvah be-hagut shel harav 'Avraham Hazan" ("The Deeds of the Fathers Prefigure Those of Their Children: History, Redemption, and Repentance in the Thought of Rabbi Abraham Hazan"), in Teshuvah u-ge'ulah (Repentance and Redemption), ed. Dov Schwartz (Ramat Gan, Israel: Bar-Ilan University Press, 2007); "Anti-Ideological Religion: Repentance, Halakhah, and Secular Culture in the Writings of Rabbi Abraham Hazan," Revue des Études Juives (forthcoming).

36. Hazan's teachers were Rabbi David Ashkenazi, (1898–1983), the chief rabbi of Algeria; and Rabbi Isaac Roche (Tlemcen, Algeria, 1906–Jerusalem, 1984).

37. Neher was born in Auvergne. Before the war he taught German; thereafter, he was active in communal affairs in France. He was a professor of Hebrew at the University of Strasbourg, where he founded the Institute for Hebrew and Jewish Studies. In 1974 he immigrated to Israel and settled in Jerusalem. See Judah Amir, ed., Nezah be-'itot shel shinui: Andre Neher ve-he-hagut ha-yebudit ha-zorfatit le-'ahar ha-sho'ah (Eternity in Changing Times: André Neher and Post-Holocaust Franco-Jewish Thought) (Jerusalem: Van Leer Institute; Tel-Aviv: Ha-Kibbutz ha-Meuhad, 2005).

38. Amir, Nezah be-'itot shel shinui. And see, more broadly, Rosenak, "Bein 'ashkenaz." This appreciation of complexity was dealt a severe blow by what they saw as "the treachery of the West" in the face of events during World War II. But Hazan's own appreciation of complexity gained theological support from his encounter with Neher, who exercised a profound influence over him.

39. See Joseph Sharvit, "Morashto ha-tarbutit shel harav Yehudah Lei'on 'Ashkenazi" ("The Cultural Legacy of Rabbi Yéhouda Léon Askénazi"), Pe'amim 91 (Spring 2002): 112.

Rabbi Yéhouda Léon Askénazi, moreover, a philosopher, was educated.<sup>40</sup> if not pluralistic, opposites and mutual war. In Neher's view, the letter bet, with white and polarity in white, lower, evil versus with bet rather than only to distinguishable way to integrate all-inclusive One, must be united—without particularism—within each element.

The distinction between depiction, again along the diagonal.<sup>41</sup> For the vertical axis along the vertical axis determines the relationship (to church life), while to their fellows (among these two axes) and dynamic center, halakhah, the Jewish law treated in Judaism, theology, metaphysics, dedicate himself to society. . . . [That] who loves [God's] Word gives up on society. Elsewhere he asks,

40. For Manitou's biography, see www.manitou.org.

41. See André Neher, The Teachings of Maharal (Cambridge, Mass., 2003).

42. See Maharal, Sefat Emet (1955), chap. 45, "u-ve-

The distinctive features of the Jewish approach here is prominent in Nehemiah's depiction, again following Mazarhal, of the three axes—vertical, horizontal, and diagonal.<sup>43</sup> For the most part, human life and Christian religious life proceed along the vertical and horizontal axes: the vertical-transcendental axis determines the relationship between man and God (and is the locus of religious life), while the horizontal-limameneut axis sets human beings in relation to their fellows (and is the locus of secular life). Judaism's vitality lies in its bringing these two axes together in a single diagonal axis—in its forging of an "active and dyadic center" between the horizontal and the vertical.<sup>44</sup> In other words, Judaism with the gravity that in other religions might be accorded to theology, metaphysics, or mystical communion. As Hazan writes: "No man can dedicate himself to God without constantly doing battle for the benefit of human society... [That] is the sense of [the well known comment in Priyati Avot: One who loves [God's] creatures loves God] [6,1]. . . . A true man of faith . . . never gives up on society and never encloses himself in a wilderness of barren faith."<sup>45</sup> Elsewhere he asks: "Is God imminent? Is He transcedent? Ah, He is everything!"

Rabbi Yehouda Leon Askenazi (called Mantou) did their work, and affording, moreover, a philosophical voice to the Near Eastern culture in which Hazan was educated.<sup>40</sup> The writings of Neher and Hazan, produced within this plural if not pluralistic environment, depend implicitly on the doctrine of the unity of opposites and make use of it explicitly when treating the concepts of peace and war. In Neher's oeuvre, the doctrine appears most explicitly in his writings on Maherai.<sup>41</sup> For example, in Neher's interpretation (following Maherai), the letter bet, with which Genesis and thus the Torah begins, represents the tension and polarity in which the world and history are suspended; higher realms versus lower, evil versus good, negativity versus affirmation.<sup>42</sup> That the Torah begins with bet rather than alef conveys that plurality is essential and that we need not only to distinguish between affirmation and negation, but also to find a suitable way to integrate all of the opposites that express different aspects of the all-inclusive One. It is in historical experience, Neher suggests, that opposites must be united—including pluralism and/or conservatism, universalism and/or exclusivism—while affording due consideration to the continued existence of particularism—

40. For Maitzot's biography (in Hebrew or in French), see www.maitzot.org.il.

41. See Andre Neher, Mitsnato shel ha-Maharil mi-Peregrinations of Maharal of Prague (Jerusalem: Reuven Mass, 2003).

42. See Maherl, Sefir Nezah Yisrael (Tel Aviv: Pardes, 1955), chap. 45, "u-pe'rey beley (S'abedtin q'b)."

at once; He is One in His variedness and in the thousand revelations of man and nature.”<sup>46</sup>

This dialectical tension, whose result is life lived on the diagonal, can be found as well in Neher,<sup>47</sup> who, like Hazan, finds it expressed in the Bible and embodied in history.<sup>48</sup> It is also voiced in Hazan’s impassioned opposition to ideology:

Any perceptive person will see that a terrible affliction has become epidemic in our world and our society; its name is “ideology.” . . . The concept serves as the source for all sorts of totalitarianisms. . . . Ideology is a non-Jewish myth, and every myth has more than a drop of idolatry. Ideology is the mother of every modern transgression . . . of exclusivist isolation, as it declares “I and no other.”<sup>49</sup>

The sin of ideology is that it relates everything without exception to first principles in a vision that is all-encompassing. Religion is so different from ideology that the two cannot even be contrasted in the same terms and figures. Religion should be figured as a journey, not a puzzle; and the journey, according to Hazan and Neher, is toward a broad horizon. There is no set path toward it, so long as the traveler keeps an eye on the horizon. Ashkenazi-style idealism, in Hazan’s view, has always aimed to derive a philosophy from its religious world, but the world of faith cannot be examined with the tools of logic and analysis. The search for truth, in the philosopher’s sense of truth, is one part of the human world, but faith—Hazan contends, following Neher and the existentialists—is a leap beyond it.<sup>50</sup> He quotes Neher saying, in the same vein: “Philosophy cannot be Jewish except on the authority of the Jewish religion, whose essence is opposition to philosophy.”<sup>51</sup>

Universal Peace

A similar spirit is evident in Neher’s and Hazan’s discussions of peace. Neher criticizes the Western Christian conception of peace, which he compares to the 46. Abraham Hazan, Letter to Emile Saban, Rousseau, July 13, 1943; Stievie, Linto'a, 73; see also 88–89.

47. André Neher, U-ve-khol zo't! (Anyway!) (Jerusalem: Reuben Mass, 1977), 29–30.

48. See André Neher, Zeibuteinu ha-yebudit (Our Jewish Identity), trans. from French by Azariah Shmueli (Jerusalem: Reuben Mass, 1994), 30.

49. Hazan’s farewell speech on completing his term as chief rabbi of the police and prison service, July 11, 1991 (from a MS in possession of his family). His comments include an element of criticism of the rabbinate of the time; see Rosenak, “Bein ‘ashkenaz.”

50. See, in this context, Samuel Hugo Bergman, Dialogical Philosophy from Kierkegaard to Buber, trans. Arnold A. Gerstein (Albany: State University of New York Press, 1991), 77–93, 110–15. The idea was already present in Hazan’s early writing; see Stievie, Linto'a, 85–86.

51. Abraham Hazan, lecture delivered on a study day marking ten years since Neher’s death, Van Leer Institute, Jerusalem, 1998 (in Eternity in Changing Times, 3).

kind of relations place.<sup>52</sup> Peace b shepherd and C irresolvable tens herds tarried in replied, ‘the field today—as Nehe

It is impossible to ternal life necessa me; everyone mu own essence. My be brothers only c line, even if its oneself in relation yours is yours”; th normal and moral is the approach ad

Neher’s critique here in moderat Rabbi Hazan’s es

“Moreover, concer he shall come and p Himself, in His glo My house shall be It is no mere happ that, for the first t universalism and th

It is “no mere ha peace, because it t brothers, unlike

The broth the other had a fa

52. For analysis of N “Neher, Levinas, v yehudim be-zorfat” (“ of Jewish Intellectuals Times, 65–66.

53. André Neher, “ Hevel” (“The Biblical nity in Changing Tim s.v. vayehi bi-hytam ba

55. See Steve, L'mito a, 434–43.
56. Abraham Hazan, "Jerusalem ou Paix Universelle," 1–8 (French MS in possession of his family); Steve,

Times, 65-66.
33. Andre Neher, "Ha-di'la'g ha-miqra'i: Qayin ve-Heven" (The Biblical Dialogue: Cain and Abel), in Eretz-Israel 23-24 (1981-82); cf. Exodus rabba, sec. 31, s.v. aygbi bi-bqayim ba-sadeh.

<sup>52</sup>. For analysis of Nehru's article, see Samuel Wyloda, "Nehru and the Problem of Jewish Intellectuals in France", in Changing Perspectives (Leiden, 1981), pp. 11-25.

The brothers of the aggadic tale were landowners, one a bachelor, while the other had a family. The former surreptitiously tried to help his brother sup-

It is "no mere happenstance" that Jerusalem was selected to stand for universal peace, because it was there that according to an aggadic tale Hazan recorded two brothers, unlike Cain and Abel, supplied each other's needs.

"Moreover, concerning the stranger who is not of Your people Israel . . . He shall come and pray toward this house" (1 Kings 8:41-42). Even God Himself, in His glory, declares, in the voice of the prophet Isaiah, "For My house shall be called a house of prayer for all peoples" (Isa. 56:7). . . . It is no mere happenstance that it was in the very heart of Jerusalem that, for the first time in history, voices were raised that emphasized universality and the brotherhood of all men.<sup>56</sup>

Neheri's critique of "the normal and moral way" of "distribution" is formulated here in moderate terms, but the argument reaches greater depth in his student Rabbi Hazan's essay "Jerusalem, or Universal Peace":<sup>55</sup>

It is impossible to live as brothers by separating from one another. First, terminal life necessarily means granting the other whatever belongs to me; everyone must live and move within a whole that encompasses my own essence. My brother must benefit from the field I own; and we can be brothers only on that basis—and not thanks to some sort of divided kingdom, even if its purpose is to attain peace. One of the ways to locate oneself in relation to the other is to say, "What is mine is mine; what is yours is yours"; that sort of distribution prevails in the world and is the normal and moral way. But the Jewish sages call it the way of Sodom; it is the approach adopted by Cain.<sup>54</sup> kind of relations that obtained between Cain and Abel until the first murder took place.<sup>52</sup> Peace based on division or separation, he argues, cannot last. Abel was a shephered and Cain a farmer, but their division of land and labor gave rise to an irresolvable tension, for "the world does not lend itself to division. When Abel's herds tarried in some field, Cain would say, 'No, this field is mine; to which Abel replied, 'the field, perhaps; but the pasture is mine,'"<sup>53</sup> And so things remains port his family, while the latter surreptitiously tried to alleviate his brother's loneliness:

And behold, one night [while each was bringing wheat to the other's field] . . . the brothers ran into each other, recognized each other, and fell crying on each other's neck. The Holy One Blessed Be He saw this and said, "When the time comes at which I want to cause My Name to dwell among mankind, I will establish My house at this point of brotherly encounter." And so, on a night that was dark and moonless but glowing with brotherly love, Jerusalem was established.<sup>57</sup>

The story of Rome's founding, Hazan continues, is quite different: "Underlying the founding of Rome we also find two brothers: the twins Remus and Romulus. . . . Both were raised by a she-wolf, and after Romulus murdered his brother, he founded the city that was destined to destroy Jerusalem."

Jerusalem's distinctiveness as the city of universal peace is implicit in its very name. In making this point, Hazan forges a new and one might say deconstructionist reading of the word Jerusalem, a reading rooted in the midrashic tradition:

The name of Jerusalem, mentioned 656 times in the Hebrew Bible, begins and ends every Jewish prayer and is the source of all inspiration and yearning. But there is an interesting semantic phenomenon, flowing from the philological mysteries of the Hebrew language: though written in the Bible as y-r-w-sh-l-m [which would be pronounced yerush-alem], it is pronounced yerushalayim [as if written with an additional yod, in the plene rather than the defective spelling actually used, as y-r-w-sh-l-y-m]. The qerei [pronounced form] always differs from the ketiv [written form]. According to the ketiv, the name is yerushalem, which means "city (or foundation) of peace," a single, unified peace. According to the qerei, however, the name is yerushalayim, meaning "city (or foundation) of doubled peace"—a shared, divided, perhaps even dual peace.<sup>58</sup>

The mystery concealed within this plural peace, according to Hazan, is implicit in Psalm 122, which specifies four divisions of the city: one theological (between heavenly and earthly Jerusalem), one topological (between upper and lower Jerusalem), one historical (between the Jerusalem of the past and of the future), and one between Jerusalem as a political capital and Jerusalem as a religious center. The city is destined to resolve each of these dualist tensions by realizing that the polar opposites are complementary, then learning to live with the tension.

In the absence of this kind of resolution (one that appears to resolve nothing), what develops is peace ensuring that within it, no competition were the "Eternal Love" or "Russian Peace."<sup>61</sup> In this Hazan defines as a religion Islam engraved on its map into two domains: the domain of the murid and by force of arms introduces his idea of the Hebrew root by uncrossing the legs.

57. Stieve, Linto'a.

58. Stieve, Linto'a, 436.

Peace, in order to attain its goal, must become the more tumultuous (alayim)—precisely in a way that is whole than a broken hand can have all its force and scope. "The Land" [26:6]. The Land of Israel or, in this case, the Land of the Murid.

Citing the interpretation of Hayyim ben Attar, Hazan notes that peace as he understands it is not limited only to the Land of Israel, but will encompass the entire world and prevail in all geographical areas. Attar's comments on the "Land of the World," a peace that responds to several crises, including the festival of Sukkot (Tishrei).

"It is natural,"

59. This was the peace agreed upon in 1713 between the Swiss cantons that had been part of the Habsburg European empire, who bore the brunt of the war, and the French, who had been supported them." Stieve, Linto'a, 436.

60. "The Americans landed in North Africa in 1942, but the unspeakable slaughter they committed there, especially in 1942, more than any other event of the Second World War, did more to damage America's image in Africa. They were acting in the name of 'American Peace'; they were fighting for a just cause; they were and certainly egocentrically.

64. Hazan, Jerusalem.

63. Hazan, Jerusalem, Steveie, Limto'a, 437.

62. See Quran 47:4, 9:5.

Afghanistan," Steveie, Limto'a, 437.

Soviet Union, in Latin America, Cuba, Africa, . . . and 61. That peace gave rise to "conflicts . . . far from the

the push of fifty political and economic considerations as far away as possible," Steveie, Limto'a, 437.

and Vietnam War. These are artificial abscesses that drain and Vietnamese antibiotics that drain verse and certainly egocentric . . . as in the Korean War ism of American Peace; that impulse was somewhat per-Africa. They were acting here on a subconscious isolation-Second World War, did they reach the shores of North only in 1942, more than three years after the start of the the unspeakable slaughter in the trenches of Verdun; and 60. "The Americans landed in France in 1917, only after portred them," Steveie, Limto'a, 437.

in distant parts, the better to defend the states that sup-European empire, who bore the assignment of waging war the Swiss cartoons that "excluded the mercenaries (cor-59. This was the peace agreement between France's Land
the push of fifty political and economic considerations as far away as possible," Steveie, Limto'a, 437.

"It is natural," says Rabbi Hayyim ben Atar, "that when there is war in the festival of Shukot (Talmud Bavli Shukkot 55).

responding to seventy nations of the world" brought in the Temple during the out the world," a peace inferred from the nature of the "seventy sacrifices (cor-Atar's comments on the verse, he again learns the importance of "peace through prevail in all geographic reaches of the human world." From Rabbi Hayyim ben but will encompass the entire world. It is peace for every individual, which will is not limited only to your land. It is a general peace that will begin with Israel peace as he understands it. From Nahmanides, he learns that "the promised peace Hayyim ben Atar (1696-1743), Hazan extracts from them an image of Jewish Citing the interpretations of this verse by Nahmanides (1194-1270) and Rabbi

Land of Israel or, in the broader sense, the entire world.<sup>64</sup> the Land" [26:6]. The verse allows for two interpretations of "land": the all its force and scope in the book of Leviticus: "I shall grant peace in whole than a broken heart." The message of "Jewish peace" appears in already)—precisely in accord with the Hasidic adage "nothing is more become the more tumultuous dual form of the name Jerusalem (ye'us-b- Peace, in order to attain its perfection, must break its singular form and

Hebrew root by uncovering the connection between the gavri and the ketiv:
introduces his idea of "Jewish peace, whose full meaning we must infer from the
and by force of arms."<sup>65</sup> In contrast to these types and definitions of peace, Hazan domain of the murderous sword, which must be subjugated by repeated attack into two domains: dar al-Islam, in which safra unprevails; and dar al-harb,<sup>66</sup> the Islam engraved on its banner and that, as a theological matter, divides the world Hazan defines as a division of domains: "the safra—the terrible peace that "Russian Peace."<sup>67</sup> Islam as well has followed the Western imperial model, which were the "Eternal Peace" of Frederick (1516),<sup>68</sup> the "Pax Americana,"<sup>69</sup> and the within it, no competing interests would be allowed to emerge. In that same spirit peace ensuring that wars would be waged only outside the empire and that, ing), what developed was the Western concept of peace, the Pax Romana—a rs to resolve not-the tension.

V realizing that the
a religious center.
of the future), and
per and lower Jerueo logical (between D Hazan, is implicit

ended in the midrashic
one might say decouspace is implicit in its erusalem."

different: "Underlythe twins Remus and mulus murdered his

lleviate his brother's world, even those dwelling in security will be frightened by the winds of war.” Any real peace, then, must be our peace and that of the other. If peace is not universal, it cannot exist for us either. If it affects only our territory and security, it is mistaken and misleading. . . . Peace does not simply pertain to the other; it begins with the other: “[peace, peace] for far and near,” proclaims the prophet Isaiah (57:19). . . . This is a peace that begins with the far before the near; a peace whose meaning in accordance with the gerei makes possible its meaning in accordance with the ketiv; a peace that bridges between essence and actuality. . . . It is precisely these two [Nahmanides and Rabbi Hayyim ben Attar], refugees from unjust oppression on the part of Judaism’s two daughter religions, who define for us what is meant by “Jewish peace”—a peace whose unity cannot be divided but which must be split so that its first part can be given to the other and the distant, in order that one may enjoy its second part.<sup>65</sup>

It is worth reemphasizing that the author of this passage, Rabbi Hazan, was a Jewish nationalist, one whose Zionism demanded that the Western model of peace, the Pax Romana, be left behind in Europe and a more wholly Jewish model be followed in the Land of Israel. His approach, which draws on midrashic sources and classical commentaries as well as on the “unity of opposites” model, may seem, in the context of current Israeli politics, “pre-postmodern” (to borrow a phrase from Barbara Herrnstein Smith).<sup>66</sup> The formal construct of the “unity of opposites” negates or obviates the premises of monistic ideology and so entails a kind of pluralism. The specific kind of pluralism entailed is realized, however, in a specifically Jewish context, one that draws sustenance from a metanarrative that the most dedicated opponents of postmodernism in Israel should be able to recognize as their own.<sup>67</sup>

The “Tree of Knowledge” and the “Tree of Life”

Rabbi Moshe Avigdor Amiel, who was chief rabbi of Tel Aviv–Jaffa from 1936 to 1946, did not adopt the doctrine of the “unity of opposites” that was so important to Rabbi Kook and Rabbi Hazan.<sup>68</sup> Rather, Amiel’s innovative views grew out of a 65. Hazan, Jérusalem.

66. Barbara Herrnstein Smith, “Relativism, Today and Yesterday,” Common Knowledge 13.2–3 (Spring–Fall 2007): 227–49, at 240.

67. See, to similar effect, the comments of Moshe Meir, “Ha-gevul ve-ha-halal ha-panui,” Makor Rishon, June 8, 2007.

68. Rabbi Amiel studied with Rabbi Hayyim of Brisk (1853–1918) and Rabbi Hayyim Ozer Grodzinsky (1863–1940). Amiel became chief rabbi of Tel Aviv–Jaffa, having previously served (since 1920) as chief rabbi of Antwerp. From a literary perspective, he was one of religious Zionism’s most effervescent and prolific writers; for a bibliography, see Isaac Werfel, “Kitvei ha-rav Mosheh Avigdor ‘Amiel’” (“The Writings of Rabbi Moshe Avigdor Amiel”), in Sefer ha-yovel le-ha-rav M. A. Amiel (Jubilee Volume for dualistic distinction between I sions.<sup>69</sup> For hi time, his cent of modern nat tially. Thought that the close i ductive of spir Judaism was fo narrative, Ami a book of scienc differs greatly society, how it the militaristic contrast to the

As for the

Rabbi M. A. Amiel) (Jerusalem: Mossad Ha-teachings, see Avraham Halevi Mahapeikha ‘a-mekha ‘Avigdor ‘Amiel’” (“the Thinking of Rav Amiel”); shenot ziyyonut datit ed. Avi Sagi and David Ilan (University Press of Hebrew University Tarbuti li-vel ha-tarbut kelalit le-‘Amiel” (“A Social Link between Jewish Thought of Rabbi M. A. Amiel”); ru’ah: Sefer ha-yovel Jubilee Volume for Eliezer Amiel (Jerusalem: Van Leer Institute, 2005), 409–38; the sophistical position is on war and peace a Aaron Tamrat. See Mivhar ketavim shel Rav Amiel (Jerusalem: Toraah: Selected Writings Center, 1992).

69. On Hazan’s typology, see “Ma’aseh ‘avot.’”

70. For elaboration, see Rosenak, “Halakhah and the Writings of Rav Amiel” (Re-Creation in Jewish Thought, ed. Josef Dan, 1992).

<sup>73</sup>. Amiel, L'art-émeraude, 43. See also Ha-midat le-hefer ha-balakah (Rules for Investigating Ha-balakah), vol. 1 (Jerusalem: Dafus ha-Lavi, 1939), 138.

71. Rabbi Moshe Averydor Amiti, Ha-zedeek ha-sotzalot ve-ha-zedeek ha-misqabati u-nimusari shelbanu (Social Justice and the Righteousness of the Poor), Tel Aviv: Tora v-Avoda Publishing, 1996, 64, 66, 160; L'nevezkhet ba-tegashut: Pride bei hiskakhat be-mahabat ha-yehudit (For the Pride of the Age: Studies of the Nature of Judaism) (Jerusalem: Moriah, 1994), 142.

Mother Siebeck, 2003), 309–38; „Parashat qorah: [kol haedah kallam qedoshim?”, Massa, be-’iqvot ha-re’ayah Qdu ve-Yisayahu Leibovitz“ („Parashat Qorah: [The Entire Congregation Is Holy?”, A Journey in the Footsteps of Rabbi Kook and Yeshayahu Leibovitz”), in Hogenba-purashah (Meditations on the Purashah), ed. Naftali Rotten-berg (Berlin: Van Leer Institute, 2003), 458–71.

70. For elaboration on this distinction, see Avi Howard Rosenak, "Halakhah, Thought and the Idea of Holiness in the Writings of Rabbi Haim David Halevi," in Creation and Re-Creation in Jewish Thought; Peter Schäfer (The Image of Joseph of Arimathea in Early Christian Art); Peter Schäfer (Honor of Jesus in Early Christianity).

69. On Hazan's typological approach, see Rosenak, "Masch'avot," Center, 1992).

Rabbi M. A. Amitz, ed. Y. L. ha-Kohen Fishman (Jerusalem), Mosassed Ha-Rav Kook, 1943, 245-56. On Amiel's dilemma: Moshé Rosenthal, "Ha-ziyonut ke-tachtingim," see Avi-Mor Rosenthal, "Ha-ziyonut ke-mahapeilah, a-mekdimit be-mishnato shel ha-rav Mosheh Avigdor Amitz," in Zionism as an Apolitical Revolution in the Thinking of Rabbi Moses Avigdor Amitz, Tel Aviv University Press, 2003, 287-306; "Tzyyun be-degem haverat-tarbut li-vehinat ha-ziqah she-bein tarbut yehudit le-tarbut khalit-le-or mishnato shel ha-rav Mosheh Avigdor Amitz," in Yeshivat Har Etzion Zionsim, Bar-Ilan University Press, 2003, 287-306; Dov Schwartz (Ramat Gan, Israel), ed. Avi Sagiv and Dov Schwartz (Hundred Years of Religious Zionism), Shechter Library at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, 2005.

As for the differences between Jews and non-Jews in their understanding dualistic distinction typical of the Zionist thinkers of his time—a sharp distinction between Israel and other nations—though he drew from it his own conclusions.<sup>69</sup> For him, the distinction was not ontological but cultural.<sup>70</sup> At the same time, his central role in the Zionist movement led him to a harshly critical view of modern nationalism; Jewish nationalism would need to differ from it substantially. Though himself possessed of broad general learning, Amiel maintained that the close involvement of Jews with European Enlightenment ideas was problematical. Jewish nationalism would need to differ from it substantially. The close involvement of Jews with European Enlightenment ideas was problematical. In the context of this highly particularistic Judaism was far him problematical.<sup>72</sup> In the context of the distinctive nature of Israel's Torah, The Torah is not attractive, Amiel defined the distinctive nature of Israel's Torah. The Torah is not a book of science or of ethics; it is "a Torah of life."<sup>73</sup> In his view, Israel's Torah differs greatly from other scriptures in how it analyzes reality, how it relates to society, how it approaches morality. These differences, he argued, shed light on the militaristic and amoral character of philosophical and Christian culture, in contrast to the pursuit of peace that characterizes Israel's Torah.

of reality, Amiel argues that gentile “knowledge” (yedi‘ah) differs from Jewish “recognition” (bakkarab), which is grounded in faith. Knowledge comes from an empirical science founded on sense data; its epistemological nature is analytical. Recognition or awareness, in contrast, flows from intuition, which leads a person to become cognizant of God in the world.<sup>74</sup> Since the knowledge valued in the West is scientific in origin,<sup>75</sup> it produces a theology in which God is an abstraction without providential qualities.<sup>76</sup> Judaism, meanwhile, entails unmediated cognizance of God, and the Jew encounters nature only through that cognizance.<sup>77</sup> Science and philosophy produce a human being with a low self-image;<sup>78</sup> Judaism understands mankind as a covenantal partner with the Creator.<sup>79</sup> Like the better-known distinctions drawn between Rome and Jerusalem by Moses Hess,<sup>80</sup> Athens and Jerusalem by Leo Strauss,<sup>81</sup> and Israel and the nations by Rabbi Kook and his student the Nazir (Rabbi David Ha-Kohen),<sup>82</sup> the distinction made by Rabbi Amiel between Greece and Israel is centered on distinctive concepts of place and time. In brief, the philosophers and scientists of Greece think most intently about place, while the Jewish sages think most intently about time. One who thinks about place has an understanding of the world that requires quantification, order, regularity, and stability; it is founded in the material realm. In contrast, thought based on time is diffuse, innovative,<sup>83</sup> dynamic, and abstract.<sup>84</sup> Because it focuses on the world of the “is,” Greece is pessimistic; Israel, directed toward the future “ought,” is optimistic (146). From the vantage point of place, one looks for deterministic natural law; from the vantage point of time, one looks for wonder and freedom (151). This gap, Amiel argues, generates a corollary distinction with respect to society: elitist philosophy versus popular religion (40–41).

It is in this context, Amiel maintains, that one can best understand the moral and political dispute between Israel and the nations: focused in its science and philosophy on knowing the “is,” Greece tends to produce monistic ideas, whereas Judaism, aspiring to know the “ought,” tends to be pluralistic (146). A parallel distinction drawn, a few years ago in these pages, by Rabbi Adin Steinsaltz may help to shed light on what Rabbi Amiel means. Steinsaltz would not argue that Judaism is or should be pluralistic. The distinction as he makes it is

74. Amiel, Li-nevukhei, 7.

75. Amiel, Darkhei Mosheb, 19–20.

76. Amiel, Li-nevukhei, 7, 45.

77. Amiel, Li-nevukhei, 143.

78. This image also affects Jews enamored of philosophy; see Amiel, Li-nevukhei, 44.

79. Amiel, Li-nevukhei, 147, 222.

80. Moses Hess, Rome and Jerusalem, trans. Maurice J. Bloom (New York: Philosophical Library, 1958).

81. Leo Strauss, “Jerusalem and Athens: Some Preliminary Reflections,” in Jewish Philosophy and the Crisis of Modernity: Essays and Lectures in Modern Jewish Thought, ed. Kenneth Hart Green (Albany: State University of New York Press, 1997), 377–405.

82. Rabbi David ha-Kohen, Qol nevu‘ah (The Voice of Prophecy) (Jerusalem: Mossad Harav Kook, 1970); Schwartz, Ha-ziyyonut ba-datt, 234–72, 273–84.

83. On this argument’s political implications for the Jewish nation, see Amiel, Ha-zedeq, 70.

84. Amiel, Ha-zedeq, 144–46.

between two kin
ences, understan alternatives—but people and thus,

Even ultimately, Ju
ple. It is the religi teous among the ge redemption; but rig
that of Jews. . . . Ju perform their own salvation by the Go

Steinsaltz present only one of which but science has its
on content: he wa
Greece as egocen doing battle on be class to another.<sup>87</sup>

For the nation be molded by the live or is put to de
it proper . . . to sen
One who is unwilling erally accepted am
the collective therape traces the roots of children sent their children were expo
that have guided W
tical interconnectio
antipluralistic stan

85. Rabbi Adin Steinsaltz, “The Irrelevance of ‘Total Knowledge’” 11.1 (Winter 1998).

86. Amiel, Ha-zedeq, 92.

87. Amiel’s remarks take the form of a series of interesting comments about Judaism. In one such comment, he views that may be interesting, he quotes Ahituv, “Ha-rav ‘Ashlag’ ve-la-zulat” (“Rabbi Ashlag and the Zulat”), Be-darkei shalom (1995), 100.

90. This distinction drawn by Amiel between Platonic and conventional Greek thinking might be seen as blurring his distinction between Jewish and gentile thought. See, further, Rosenak, "Why the degenerate".
89. Amiel, Ha-zedek, 92.
88. Amiel, Ha-zedek, 54.
87. Amiel's remarks take issue with Nietzsche's sweepingly comments about Judaism; see Ha-zedek, 108. For a view that may be interestingly compared to his, see Yoska 1970); Schwartz, The Voice of Prophecy (book, 1970); Schatz, My Life in Shulom, 469–84.
86. Amiel, Ha-zedek, 42.
85. Rabbi Adin Steinsaltz, "Peace without Confrontation: The Irrelevance of 'Tolerance' in Judaism," Commentary 111, 1 (Winter 2005): 41–47, at 41–43.
84. Amiel, Ha-zedek, 52.

antiphilistic stance is shared by all in the West—capitalists, socialists, and fascists. That have guided Western society,<sup>90</sup> but rather a system of self-interested, egotistical interconnections, based on a fear of social anarchy.<sup>91</sup> A coercive, monistic, patriarchal society that exposes itself to the world, Amiel thus argues, is "as clay to the collective thereby forfeits his right to exist on the face of the earth."<sup>92</sup> Amiel traces the roots of this approach to Athens. There, in the name of social utility, children sent their aged parents to their deaths in the mountains, and defective children were exposed to die.<sup>93</sup> In the end, then, it is not Platonic abstract ideals that guide the world, but rather a system of self-interested, egotistical interconnections, based on a fear of social anarchy.<sup>91</sup> A coercive, monistic, patriarchal society that exposes itself to the world, Amiel thus argues, is "as clay to the collective thereby forfeits his right to exist on the face of the earth."<sup>92</sup> Amiel really accepted among them that an individual who does not fulfill his duty to live or is put to death." Hence, "even the most enlightened . . . governments find themselves on behalf of human equality because it rejects the servitude of one class to another.<sup>97</sup>

Steinsaltz presents a more or less formal distinction between kinds of zealots, only one of which is tolerant of the other (Judaism has no problem with science, but science has its problems with Judaism). Amiel's distinction is more focused on content: he wants to denigrate the philosophical and scientific approach of Greece as egocentric and unsympathetic,<sup>98</sup> while seeking to depict Judaism as doing battle on behalf of human equality because it rejects the servitude of one people and thus views itself as the religion of all people. It is the religion of the gentiles alone. . . . In other words, the religion of Jews among the gentiles are not blocked, as transgressor Jews are, from performing their own religious obligations in a way that entitles them to salvation by the God of Israel.<sup>99</sup>

Even ultimately, Judaism does not view itself as the religion of all people. Unlike other faiths, has no missionary aspirations: people and thus, unlike other faiths, has no missionary aspirations: alternatives—but Judaism, Steinsaltz adds, is a religion meant uniquely for one ences, understand themselves as supporting one truth against all the supposed between two kinds of zealotry, scientific and monotheistic. Religions, like science, understand themselves as supporting one truth against all the supposed 91. Amiel, Ha-zedek, 32, 92; Lifnei ha-zedek, 75, 92–97, 124.

92. Amiel, Ha-zedek, 469–84.
93. Amiel, Ha-zedek, 41–43.
94. Amiel, Ha-zedek, 54.
95. Amiel, Ha-zedek, 52.
96. Amiel, Ha-zedek, 42.
97. Amiel's remarks take issue with Nietzsche's sweeping comments about Judaism; see Ha-zedek, 108. For a view that may be interestingly compared to his, see Yoska 1970); Schwartz, The Voice of Prophecy (book, 1970); Schatz, My Life in Shulom, 469–84.
98. Amiel, Ha-zedek, 42.
99. Amiel, Ha-zedek, 41–43.

cists alike. The “image of God” within human beings is an idea that is foreign to them, and Western culture therefore affords a person status only insofar as he subjects himself to a party or other group.<sup>92</sup>

Judaism, by contrast, rejects all manner of interests (be they collective or personal). Jewish justice, according to Amiel, is unaffected by money, party, or status.<sup>93</sup> The law is sensitive, though not subordinate, to the individual in his distinctiveness, and it calls society to account for offenses against him. Gentile law is figured as a Procrustean bed, associated by midrashic interpretation with the consummately inhospitable people of Sodom.<sup>94</sup> Abraham, on the contrary, is said to have offered his visitors beds suited to their size.<sup>95</sup> In the same spirit, halakhah strictly enforces equality: “You shall have one manner of law,”<sup>96</sup> favoring neither the poor (“neither shall you favor a poor man in his cause”)<sup>97</sup> nor the rich (“you shall not respect persons”)<sup>98</sup>—nor even the homeborn (“The stranger that dwelleth with you shall be unto you as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself; for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt”).<sup>99</sup> “Man was created as an individual,” Amiel reasons, and the individual precedes the collective. Of that individual, the psalmist says to God, “you have made him but little lower than the angels.”<sup>100</sup> An individual’s sorrow breaches the gates of heaven; Jewish ethics demands respect for parents even when it clashes with social utility; and the Jew’s obligation to love mankind applies to everyone.

Peace and War

With respect to the concepts of peace and war, the distinctions that Amiel makes are entirely between Israel and the West. He admits of no relevant distinctions between the Greco-philosophical, Christian, and modern secular ethics of war.<sup>101</sup> In his view, each of these cultural structures contains within it a warrant for violence against “the other.” The narrow, monistic “knowledge of the truth” in the philosophical tradition entails an aggressiveness that subjects the other to the

92. “The . . . culture regards man as a small screw in the machine, which has no importance apart from the machine. The instant the screw is removed from the machine, it no longer has any value” (Amiel, Li-nevukhei, 137). He is here writing of the rise of fascism.

93. Amiel, Li-nevukhei, 91.

94. “If the guest was larger than the bed, they would cut off his legs. Conversely, if he was too small, they would stretch his legs.” Amiel, Ha-zedeq, 71.

95. Amiel, Ha-zedeq, 71.

96. Lev. 23:22.

97. Exod. 23:3.

98. Deut. 16:19.

99. Lev. 19:34.

100. Ps. 8:6.

101. Mishnah Sanhedrin 4:5. Amiel uses the same logic in criticizing Christian culture as he does in criticizing Western secular culture, but he draws a distinction between them, in that he favors inquisitorial Christianity over the secular order that produced the world wars. The Inquisition, for all its dreadfulness, reflected a dispute “for the sake of heaven,” but disputes among secular political parties no longer need any sort of religious cover (Amiel, Li-nevukhei, 137–38). Moreover, he argues, secular ideology gave rise to racism and its attendant horrors.

“good” of whoever is in the name of God. The drive to wage war, rooted in the belief that their souls might be saved, is to be contrasted with the drive to eat from the “Procrustean bed” of technology, which, like the new delights, at the level of technique, is the drive to wage war.

Hence Amiel’s result of eating from the all the sciences . . . could be great in wisdom and knowledge. War, which has only recently really has come to an end, has brought a flood of tears and misery. The war brought about many previously unimaginable inventions that changed the nature of the tree of knowledge and their culture . . . the turning, flaming . . . kind today would still be there in his gazebo.<sup>102</sup>

In stark contrast, Judaism pursues the pursuit of rightness and all of nature, including Amalek: “Amalek is

102. Amiel, Ha-zedeq, 33.

103. Amiel, Darkhei Moshe, 137.

104. Amiel, Li-nevukhei, 137.

105. Amiel, Li-nevukhei, 137.

106. Amiel, Darkhei Moshe, 137.

107. Amiel, Darkhei Moshe, 137.

"Good" of whoever holds power and authority. The Inquisition was thereby justified in the name of a "Christian morality" that called for burning people alive so their souls might enter paradise.<sup>102</sup> A similarly narrow and violent morality, Amiel believed, is to be found in the secularist approach, which derives from the sin of eating from the "tree of knowledge" (in other words, the secular world is given over to technology and the pursuit of quality of life).<sup>103</sup> Modern Western culture, secular and technological, knows how to "make human life pleasant and devise new delights"; at the same time, however, "it serves as a means of destruction", a murderous machine, more disastrous even than the medieval Crusades.<sup>104</sup> Worse, might get governments can deploy. War is the impetus for the destructive activity that enhances human comfort, while technological creativity strengthens the drive to wage war, thereby renewing the cycle.<sup>105</sup>

Hence Amiel's figuration of Western technological culture as the deadly result of eating from the tree of knowledge:

all the sciences . . . come from the angel of death, like whom none is as great in wisdom and knowledge. Consider the Great War, the World War, which has only recently come to an end—and who knows if it really has come to an end—and has wreaked horrific destruction and a flood of tears and blood. And yet, on the other hand, we see how the war brought about a widening of scientific knowledge to an extent previously unimaginable and led to the development of grand and valuable inventions that our forefathers could not have envisioned, such as artillery able to hit targets from great distances . . . And that, indeed, is the nature of the tree of knowledge, the Torah tells us. . . . If you want to know the tree of knowledge of all the nations . . . their civilization and their culture . . . you must start with Genesis. . . . Were it not for the turning, framing sword, created from the tree of knowledge, mankind today would still dwell in the ancient Garden of Eden as a king in his gazebo.<sup>106</sup>

In stark contrast, Judaism entails eating of the “tree of life”, which is embodied in the pursuit of righteousness and justice<sup>107</sup>—a Justice that embraces all of humanity and all of nature as well.<sup>108</sup> Here the distinction made is between Israel and Amalek: “Amalekism detests the weak, while Judaism detests the mighty. Amale-

108. Rabbi Moshe Avigdor Amitel, Shabbat matkhetu: Once ma'amarim u-ne'unim she-nifrasenu be-ittonim shonim le-targot boches ta-anulah lema'an ba-shabbat (The Sabbath Queen: Selected Essays and Speeches Appertaining in Various Periodicals during the Course of a Month Dedicated to Publicizing the Sabbath) (Tel Aviv: Mishmeret Hashabbat, 1939).

109. Amitel, Hazekne, 33.

110. Amitel, Darkei Moshbe, 22.

111. Amitel, Darkei Moshbe, 19–20.

112. Amitel, Lil-neukhei, 137.

113. Amitel, Lil-neukhei, 135.

114. Amitel, Lil-neukhei, 135.

115. Amitel, Darkei Moshbe, 22.

116. Amitel, Darkei Moshbe, 22.

117. Amitel, Darkei Moshbe, 22.

kism prizes the pursuers, but the God of Israel prizes the pursued.”<sup>109</sup> And how is Amalekite murderousness to be opposed? Judaism does not, Amiel argues, believe in using force against force: “An accuser cannot become a defender. Evil cannot be extirpated from the world through evil itself. Terror cannot be eliminated from the world through terror by the other side. Accordingly, war against the mighty hand is not waged with the mighty hand.” Rather, “war [is waged] against the sword with the book. The book of paper or parchment . . . will vanquish every sword.”<sup>110</sup> On his interpretation, opposing violence with words has always been Israel’s path<sup>111</sup>—and he adds that the nations of the world were so stunned by this refusal to shed blood in battle that they invented the libel that Jews shed gentile blood in secret.<sup>112</sup>

Of course, Israel can take up the sword when there is no alternative, in order to save lives, but Jews do so “with great sorrow and anguish, for they are the descendants of Jacob, who feared killing more than he feared being killed.”<sup>113</sup> Amiel rejects absolutely any acts of terror or violence meant to attain a goal: “that sort of morality is the morality not of Jews but of gentiles.”<sup>114</sup> It is a morality prepared to forgo the prohibition of murder on utilitarian grounds:

This is also the morality of Bismarck’s nationalism and Hitler’s, a morality based on the principle that the end sanctifies the means and that in pursuing their overall benefit, they may use all means, however ghastly. Jewish morality teaches the very opposite: the end does not sanctify the means; rather, ghastly means desecrate even a holy purpose.<sup>115</sup>

Jewish nationalism cannot permit what Judaism forbids, and it forbids the hatred of the other that is the basis of non-Jewish nationalism.<sup>116</sup> Even the supreme goal of return to the Land of Israel cannot permit what religion forbids.<sup>117</sup> There is

<sup>109.</sup> Rabbi Moshe Avigdor Amiel, Derashot ‘el ‘ami (Discourses to My People) (Tel Aviv, 1964), pt. 3, 134.

<sup>110.</sup> Amiel, Derashot, 134.

<sup>111.</sup> Battling the sword with the word had been Israel’s way, Amiel writes, since the time of Joseph before Pharaoh, Joshua against Amalek, Simeon the Righteous before Alexander of Macedon, and Rabbi Yohanan ben Zakkai before Vespasian and Titus: Derashot, 135. After citing the midrash from Yoma 69a, Amiel adds: “Simeon the Righteous did battle against Alexander of Macedon; against military uniforms, we go forth in priestly garb” (135).

<sup>112.</sup> “Not for naught did our enemies invent the blood libels they charged us with. Their minds could not grasp how a nation so different from all other nations could exist in the world without drawing blood from the others. By their lights, they had to suspect us of shedding blood in secret, instead of their overt shedding of blood like water.”

<sup>113.</sup> Amiel, Derashot, 137–38.

<sup>114.</sup> Amiel, Ha-zofeh, July 27, 1938.

<sup>115.</sup> Amiel, Ha-zofeh, July 27, 1938.

<sup>116.</sup> “This nationalism draws nourishment, first and foremost, not from the ‘image of God’ within man but from the satanic destructive force within him; that is, from his hatred for anyone who is not of his race or not a citizen of the land.” Amiel, Li-nevukhei, 287.

<sup>117.</sup> They have spoken accurately, Amiel writes, of “a nation that resembles an ass”; for if the nation’s only “coagulating agent is the Land—the shared homeland of the entire nation, from which they sustain themselves—their feelings are felt by an ass as well, however thickheaded.” See Li-nevukhei, 243. See also Gadi Taub, Ha-mitnahlim ve-ha-ma’vaq ‘al mashma’ut ha-ziyonut (The Settlers and the Struggle over the Meaning of Zionism) (Tel Aviv: Yediot Aharonot, 2007), where he notes the shift within religious indeed no intere

der may not be p
itself, in all its glo

We are forbidden t shall not murder”; a murdering people c
know clearly that b are obligated to fir through blood.<sup>119</sup>

In sum, Rabbi Amiel
guished between J
time, would be co
of monism and ex “precipitulates” a rida to Julia Kristeva, Zionist nationalist
ist and even anarch
from science is ch

As for Neh
ist thinkers exam
the unity of oppo
to serve an overa
each opposite tha
There is no hierarc
thermore, holds th
and is therefore o
Hazan understand and particularism positions. Jewish incompatible. Eac
been too sharply c
by no means natu

Zionism from suppor
ing a Jewish state to su achieving settlement.
both trends.

<sup>118.</sup> “Of such national torically: ‘Remain here that resembles an ass understood by gentiles
well. ‘The ox knows it

119. Babbi Moshe Avigdor Amiel, Tehumin 10 (1989): 148.
through—and gentiles dress up the through as the homeland from which they are nourished and sustained. And while the trough is a small matter and the Land of Israel a great one, the difference is only quantitative, not qualitative—“ive.” Amiel, Ha-zedeek, 111.

118. "Of such nationalism the sages already spoke the-sotically. Remain here with the ass [Gen. 22:5]—a nation that resembles an ass; that is, nationalism as usually understood by gentiles is a feeling found among asses as well. The ox knows its owner, and the ass his master;

As for Neher, Rabbi Hazan, and Rabbi Kook, the other Jewish nationalists just thinkers examined in this article, it cannot be denied that their doctrine of the unity of opposites makes metaphysical assumptions and is itself easily made to serve an overruling metanarrative—yet the doctrine demands of itself that each opposite that is embraced be affirmed in its own right and on its own terms.
There is no hierarchy or synthesis of these elements implied. The doctrine, furthermore, holds that every narrative requires the existence of all other narratives and is therefore obliged, paradoxically, to respect and protect them. Neher and Hazan understand the doctrine of the unity of opposites as a rejection of monism and particularism, which they regard as nonreligious and certainly non-Jewish positions. Jewish nationalism and postmodern thought, then, are by no means incompatible. Each requires only to be blurrered slightly at the edges—which have been too sharply drawn, in any case—for the two to appear complementary, and by no means natural enemies.

In sum, Rabbi Amiel, a central figure of the Zionist movement in his day, distinguished between Jews and gentiles on grounds that, among many Zionists of our time, would be considered post-Zionist and postmodern. His objection to all forms of monism and exclusivist metanarrative as kinds of aggression against the other, "precapitalists", a line of postmodern thinking that extends from Levisas and Derrida to Jyllia Kristeva, Gianni Vattimo, and Bruno Latour. While undoubtedly a Zionist nationalist thinker, Amiel argued that Jewish culture includes antinationalist and even anarchic dimensions. Moreover, the antihypotheticalism evident in his recoil

We are forbidden to spill Arab blood . . . by the commandment "you shall not murder", and it represents moral decline to explain the sin of murdering people only on utilitarian grounds. In my view, even if we know clearly that [killing] we will attain the total redemption, we are obligated to firmly reject that "redemption" and not be redeemed through blood.<sup>119</sup> indeed no interest in Judaism to which all else should be subordinated, and murther may not be permitted as a means to a goal even for the sake of redemption itself, in all its glory.<sup>118</sup> Amiel words this point unequivocally:

COLUMNS	Fuzziness and Perceptions of Language in the Middle Ages	Crossed Wires:	On the Prague-Paris Surrealist	Telphonie	Derek Sayer	193
REVIEWS	A Catholic Muslim Prophet: Augustin de Riberia, "the Boy Who Saw Angels"	Interpretation and Resistance	Miguel Tamayo	208
SYMPOSIUM	"Pre-postmodern": Four Jewish Nationalist Thinkers of the Last Century	Fuzzy Studies: A Symposium	on the Consequence of Blur	Part 2
267	Mercedes García-Arenal	Introduction: Genres of Blur	Martin Jay	229
292	Avinadam Rosendak	Fuzzy Reasoning	François Benvenuta	239
312	Translated by Joel Linsider	Carefully Uncertain: The Limits of Clarity at Interreligious Borders	Francis X. Clooney, SJ	325
329	Francis X. Clooney, SJ	Poetry	Wahite	329
348	John Shoptaw	Poetry	John Shoptaw	325
361	Carefully Uncertain: The Limits of Clarity at Interreligious Borders	Clarity	Peter Burke	239
377	François X. Clooney, SJ	History	Fuzzy Histories	229
394	Ermanno Benvenuta	The Fuzziness of "Paganism"	Christopher P. Jones	249
411	Introduction	The Fuzziness of "Paganism"	Emerson	348		